In contemporary debates over same-sex marriage and "rainbow families" within capitalist democracies, LGBTI rights groups, states and religious groups all battle over how "family" should be defined and inscribed within the national value system. Drawing on both feminist critiques of the family and literature on homonormativity, homonationalism and homoprotectionism, this chapter considers the imbrication of debates over homosexuality and gay rights with debates over the meaning of the nation and the still profoundly gendered family as its bedrock. The chapter is comparative, drawing on examples... 1992. Familiar Exploitation: A New Analysis of Marriage in Contemporary Western Societies. Cambridge: Polity Press. Google Scholar.
