To motivate employees who adopt this perspective, managers should provide employees the opportunity to learn, as well as deepen and expand their skillset. Employees are naturally motivated to perform well in these opportunities. Another important aspect is trust. Managers are often successful when they exhibit trust toward employees "to perform well, identify problems and develop solutions, and make and implement decisions appropriate for their level." Provide constructive performance feedback, identify areas of improvement and guide on how to improve. Pay more attention on under performers. Do not criticise a low performer, instead provide guidance and tell ways to improve skills. Anne Bruce has contributed to Manager's Guide to Motivating Employees 2/E as an author.
