Paper for European Conference in English around and with Judith Butler: "What is Coalition?" It is based on ethnographic work with peasant families and the life stories of three women. As a result of the creation of new solidarity networks and collective experiences, we suggest substantial changes in women's empowerment and self-perception of gender roles. However, these modifications have not been intentionally pursued. The original motivations are more closely linked to the sense of belonging to a collective of exploited peasants and the longing for political participation. An interactionist studying social movements might address social movement norms and tactics as well as individual motivations. For example, social movements might be generated through a feeling of deprivation or discontent, but people might actually join social movements for a variety of reasons that have nothing to do with the cause.Â Social movements are purposeful, organized groups striving to work toward a common social goal. While most of us learned about social movements in history classes, we tend to take for granted the fundamental changes they caused "and we may be completely unfamiliar with the trend toward global social movement.
