In the movie 'Super 30' India is termed as 'third world country' and the reason of being so can be seen through these pictures (according to the movie):- Images sourc (more)Loadingâ€¦ I have seen many people calling India a 'Third world country' from last few weeks. Actually people used to call India a third world country earlier too but one of the dialogues from a movie has circulated a big misconception among people.Â As many of these countries were erstwhile colonies and were poor and underdeveloped under the colonial rule; the third world also acquired the connotation of poor or underdeveloped country. Since the end of cold war; the third world movement has become irrelevant and the term is not longer used commonly. And Indiaâ€™s share of exports was 27%. However, towards the end of colonial period, as calculated by the then notable estimators, Dadabhai Naoroji, VKRV Rao, the aggregate growth of India between 1900â€“1950 was less than 2%, and an annual 0.5% growth in per capita output /year. Export share fell to 2%. You can imagine the level of exploitation.Â And the railways laid were largely for the convenience of British as they connected important trade centers to the ports so that they helped the British export and import easily, and roads were constructed to mobilize the army within India. The posts, telegraph was for the effective administration and ruling on Indians. These developments only aggravated Indiaâ€™s economic loss. Massacres.
