Approach for College Instructors. ABSTRACT. Instructors across the disciplines require their students to write literature reviews. Although numerous sources describe the literature review process, instructors and students face difficulty when approaching the structure of a literature review. This paper presents a straightforward, efficient approach for teaching students how to write a literature review. This type of scholarly writing is an apt bottleneck to use in a decoding study because it is a common assignment in political science courses that poses challenges for many students. Indeed, Cisco (2014) found that this is a particularly frustrating assignment—a bottleneck to learning—because students often have "difficulty with the structure of the literature review" (p. 42).
