When working with special needs students, two terms you are sure to encounter are accommodation and modification. An accommodation is a device, material, or support process that will enable a student to accomplish a task more efficiently. Modification refers to changes to the instructional outcomes; a change or decrease in the course content or outcome. Provide oral instruction for students with reading disabilities. Present tests and reading materials in an oral format so the assessment is not unduly influenced by lack of reading ability. Provide learning disabled students with frequent progress checks.

Understanding how collaborative consultation may benefit students is a step toward getting students the help that they may need to be successful in an inclusion classroom setting. What does Collaborative Consultation look like in the general education classroom? An important benefit for students with special needs is that through collaborative consultation multiple people are getting together to communicate and share knowledge about these students, which results in the students being addressed according to academic need instead of special education label. Resources The seventh edition of Collaboration, Consultation, and Teamwork for Students with Special Needs, focuses on collaboration in a variety of environments and emphasizes constructive ways to use educator differences to serve students with special needs. This text's broad perspective ensures coverage of the history of collaboration, ways to structure and implement collaborative teams, important processes and practices that ensure effective co-educator partnerships, and the external support that makes collaborative school consultation successful. The seventh edition features new chapters devoted to p For students with special needs and learning disabilities, hearing instructions or following directions can be made difficult if there are too many distractions. Schedule breaks throughout the day and seat students with special needs in an area of the classroom that limits distractions; for example, do not sit these children by a window, in front of an open door, or by the air conditioner, as people walking by or additional noises might be too distracting. Use music and voice inflection. Give students with special needs opportunities for success. Children with learning disabilities often feel like they do not succeed in certain areas, but structuring lessons that lead to successful results is a way to keep them motivated.

Other Resources. In special education situations, individual learners' needs often dictate the curricula. General educators bring content specialization, special education teachers bring assessment and adaptation specializations. Time away from the classroom for consultation, professional conferences, and additional training is vital to the success of any program. Walther-Thomas and others conducted a study of inclusion and teaming in 1996 to assess collaboration between general education and special education staff. Students with disabilities developed better self images, became less critical and more motivated, and recognized their own academic and social strengths. Their social skills improved and positive peer relationships developed.
