Colette, outstanding French writer of the first half of the 20th century whose best novels, largely concerned with the pains and pleasures of love, are remarkable for their command of sensual description. Her greatest strength as a writer is an exact sensory evocation of sounds, smells, tastes. Colette was reared in a village in Burgundy, where her much-loved mother awakened her to the wonders of the natural world—everything that germinates, blossoms, or flies. At age 20 and ill-prepared for both married life and the Paris scene, Colette married the writer and critic Henri Gauthier-Villars (Willy), 15 years her senior. He introduced her to the world of Parisian salons and the demimonde, and, not long after their marriage, he discovered her talent for writing. French Forum 27.3 (2002) 119-121

Bethany Ladimer's study of Colette, Simone de Beauvoir, and Marguerite Duras, seen from the point of view of age and aging as reflected in their lives and works, is original, thoughtful, and well-written. In fashioning her portraits of these three powerhouses of twentieth-century French literature, she has succeeded in bridging the gap between biographical criticism, feminist theory, cultural studies, and literary analysis. For women writers, the French literary tradition has posed additional pitfalls that Ladimer proceeds to outline in chapters one and two. She proposes to show us how these three women writers challenged their cultural heritage, going "beyond" received views of feminine identity and attuning their writing to this "beyond."
