Centering his study on Barbauld's effort to develop a visionary poetic stance, Watkins argues that the deliberate arrangement of the poems creates a coherent portrayal of Barbauld's poetic, political, and social vision, a far-sighted sagacity born of her deep belief that the principles of love, sympathy, liberty, and pacifism are necessary for a secure and meaningful human reality. In tracing the contours of this effort, Watkins examines, in particular, the tension in Barbauld's poetry between her desire to engage directly with the political realities of the world and her equally strong longin Meehan's, Michael Liberty and poetics in eighteenth-century England (London, 1986) is devoted to exploring this theme, which is also implicit throughout Weinbrot's, Howard Augustus Caesar in Augustan England (Princeton, 1978). 36 Swift, Sentiments of a Church-of-England man, p. 18. Elsewhere, he particularized this account of Roman culture with specific reference to the Latin language, which had undergone a slow process of improvement over the centuries but came to grief in the transition from republic to empire (A proposal for correcting, improving and ascertaining the English Michael Meehan, Liberty and Poetics in Eighteenth Century England (New Hampshire: Croom Helm 1986), p. 42. On the first page of his An Essay on Taste, Gerard admits his debt to another prominent Shaftesburean: "Mr Hutcheson was the first who considered the powers of imagination as so many senses. In his Inquiry concerning beauty and virtue, and his Essay on the passions, he calls them internal senses" (ET 1). All references to Gerard's Essay are to this "the greatly expanded third edition." Google Scholar.
