Movements is a collection, joined with commentary, of Marx and Engels's observations on the national question. The observations appeared in their lifetime in newspaper articles, lectures, letters and as subtopics in major theoretical works. In their writings of the 1840s, Marx and Engels considered that capitalism and national independence went hand in hand since independent national economic development was the raison d'être of the bourgeoisie. Capitalism was intimately linked with the emergence of a national capitalist class shaped by and controlling the nation state
