The comic strip has been an essential part of the American newspaper since its first appearance more than 125 years ago. Newspaper comics—often called the "funnies" or the "funny pages"—quickly became a popular form of entertainment. Characters like Charlie Brown, Garfield, Blondie, and Dagwood became celebrities in their own right, entertaining generations of people young and old. Before Newspapers. The middle part of the 20th century is considered the golden age of newspaper comics as strips proliferated and papers flourished. Detective "Dick Tracy" debuted in 1931; "Brenda Starr"—the first cartoon strip written by a woman—was first published in 1940; "Peanuts" and "Beetle Bailey" each arrived in 1950. An overview of comic strip history presents the work of leading cartoonists past and present, from Krazy Kat to Bloom County. See the Best Books of the Month Looking for something great to read?
