French artist Jean Dunand was certainly the most important lacquer artist of the Art Deco period. During his formative years, he was mostly interested in sculpture and copper work. After 1910, he began his lacquer experiments as the apprentice of Japanese artist Seizo Sugawara. On many occasions, he worked with other prominent furniture designers of the Art Deco period and after a whole century, his furniture and decorative works are still highly valued by art collectors. Leon Bakst – Scheherazade set design, 1910. Leon Bakst – Russian Leading Costume Designer. Art Deco is primarily defined by its eclectic choice of styles.

One consequence of this use of rare or unusual construction methods and materials was that Art Deco furniture of this era was generally very expensive. Designers. Some of the prominent and famous French Art Deco furniture designers include Paul Follot, and especially Jacques Emile Ruhlman whose company was to become one of the most famous interior design firms in France. His furniture is distinguished by its ideal proportions and the delicate tapering legs of his smaller pieces. Art Deco furniture carving and ornament is relatively subdued; the look is pared-down and streamlined; wood is detailed with refined geometric shapes – spheres, trapezoids, chevrons. His peers included glass designer René Lalique; the elegant interior designer Jules Leleu; Maurice Dufrenoy (neoclassical fluted chair and table legs are a keynote of his work); Paul Follot (signature details include gilt- and silver-leafing); the team of Sœur et Mare (both were painters, and created sensuous pieces with curving, Rococo-esque elements); and André Groult. (who loved voluptuous bombé forms). Even so, in the larger sense Art Deco design is all of a piece. As you can see from the works offered below, Art Deco was the style of an assertive modernity: bold, elegant, chic, and impossible to ignore.
