Mainstream education for hearing impaired children and youth. G. Nix. The education of deaf children: Issues, theory and practice. S. P. Quigley. This chapter examines concepts of learning and how they can be applied in working with deaf children and the adults who support their learning. These issues are discussed from a multilingual perspective, recognizing the increasingly plural and dynamic use of sign and spoken languages in deaf children's daily lives, and the need for pedagogies that respond to these complex language and learning issues. The chapter illustrates how issues of learning can become separated or omitted from discussions about language in deaf education; this sometimes inhibits fruitful transactions. Although educational mainstreaming of children with special needs formally began in Iran since 1992 there is little information whether hearing impaired children feel competent in regular schools. METHODS: To determine the perceived competence and school adjustment of hearing impaired children in mainstream primary school settings, the self-perception profile was administered to 60 mainstreamed hard of hearing children and 60 classmates with normal hearing matched for gender by a single interviewer.
