chapter introduction to social psychology. what is social psychology? social psychology the scientific study of how thoughts, feelings, and behaviors are. The fundamental motives and specific goals active at any one time reflect the continual interaction of factors inside the person and factors outside in the world. Person = features or characteristics that individuals carry into social situations. Situation = environment events or circumstances outside the person. Person-situation interactions: Neither the person nor the situation is a fixed entity. William James: Different social situations trigger different goals. Because there is often quite a bit going on in a single situation, your goal at any given moment may depend on what you are paying Social psychology is about understanding individual behavior in a social context. Social psychology is to do with the way these feelings, thoughts Social psychologists therefore deal with the factors that lead us to behave in a given way in the presence of others, and look at the conditions under which certain behavior/actions and feelings occur. Social psychology is to do with the way these feelings, thoughts, beliefs, intentions and goals are constructed and how such psychological factors, in turn, influence our interactions with others. A text by Klineberg (1940) looked at the interaction between social context and personality development by the 1950s a number of texts were available on the subject. Journal Development.
